Every time I feel I have a grimly look on my lips, every time that a humid and rainy November descend on my soul, every time that a bad mood takes hold of me... then I say it's time to go out to sea as soon as possible, this is my substitute for a gun and a bullet.

Sea. What sea? The sound of the sea. What does the sound of the sea brings to your mind?

Melville's Moby Dick. A book. All the sea in a book.

Every time you take the book in your hands something switches on, and you start thinking big: whales, sailing ships, oceans, the most exaggerated things.

A little installation, a little performance for a small crowd who watches little objects recalling big events.

All stolen from Melville, for a few minutes.

As if we were in the whaler hold. That's all.
